Live Issue Work?

- Discuss (20 minutes)

The IETF encourages working groups to think about or experiment with unstructured meeting time in one of their slots. This time could be used for free-form discussion in the whole group, an “unconference” style idea session in the different corners of the room, or a hacking session devoted to the WG’s technology for example.

The REGEXT chairs are open for ideas of using unstructured meeting time if that will help our work proceed faster. We have a small working group with limited resources, that seem to be more productive around meetings. One of the suggestions could be that we would have live document text editing or issue list brainstorming time reserved on our agenda. A negative consequence could be that remote participation for such time would be harder, or that not everything is publicly recorded. We would like to hear your opinion.
